Biographical note: Edward Power 1951-2019, a poet whose work was marked by gentleness, tenderness and love. His life was marked by a number of tragic accidents but sustained by his art and faith. Born on the small farm at Kilcraggan, near Mooncoin, Co. Kilkenny, in 1951.

His talent for writing showed itself early, when one of his written pieces was published in the English comic, Victor. One of his poems was highly praised by the eminent TV personality Eamon Andrews, (taken from an article by Mark Roper for The Irish Times, 1 November 2019). Many poems were taken by David Marcus for the Irish Press New Irish Writing. Contact with the Carrick-on-Suir poet Michael Coady led to lifelong friendship, and joint trips into the poetry world, in particular to the Listowel Writers' Festival.

On his return to Ireland from London he worked as a journalist. He edited and produced the four issues of the literary magazine Riverine in the late 1980s. Later he ran his own publishing imprint Rectory Press, producing some 14 titles between 2002 and 2005. Their subjects matter included poetry, memoir and history.
